Computed tomography (CT) of the chest revealed multifocal, small, patchy consolidations and ground glass opacities in the lower lung fields bilaterally. He had been at a camp in southern Florida the previous day. He had not been able to resume school and was admitted to the hospital. The patient was transferred to our institution from a different hospital 2 days later, at which time the patient was afebrile, hemodynamically stable, and had no cough, sputum, or shortness of breath. The patient was febrile to 39.3°C (103.1°F) and had tachycardia to 103 beats per minute. He was afebrile the next day. Physical examination was notable for tachypnea with a respiratory rate of 40 breaths per minute and bilateral inspiratory crackles. Laboratory tests revealed a white blood cell (WBC) count of 10,500 cells per cubic millimeter (normal WBC count range is 4,500 to 10,000 cells per cubic millimeter), 98% neutrophils, and elevated C-reactive protein of 56 mg per deciliter (normal range is
